Communication is the main objective of learning a new language, which implies the ability to be understood in that language and understand what another speaker says.

The teaching of a language is based on four pillars: oral comprehension, reading, writing and communication. However, traditional teaching focuses mainly on the development of written skills.

As a result, most students are practically unable to speak, feeling ridiculous, panicky to make a mistake and equally unable to understand what is being said.

Our “Speaking Workshop” focuses mainly on the development and improvement of those skills. Grammar, reading and writing are necessary tools and directed to a single goal: Talking!
